

As soon as you put foot on the walk to the pass, the very air seems to reject your presence, and you are sent tumbling the way you came. Luckily, up there somebody is keeping an eye on you: there's no damage.