I predict 1995 will be a great year for Science Fiction. That isn't just optimism, either. I could point to the increase of SF syndicated TV shows as an indicator, but I prefer to look at this at an even greater way--it is simple demographics. Even great "adult" science fiction shows of the past (like "The Twilight Zone") stayed on the air mainly because of a large audience of young males. Well, the baby boomers are getting to that age where they may find SF cool. If this starts to happen (and I argue this is already beginning) we can look forward to more and more SF on television and more SF films in production. I think "V" would have a much better chance today than it did when it was on the air.

Our contributors have brought more great info this month. Where these guys dig up all this information is beyond me, but I think you'll be very pleased with the coverage.

Hope you enjoy this issue. Please let me know how we are doing. Write me on AOL at TimKBear or on the Internet at Tim.K@VirComm.com.

See ya cybernetically!
