

Getting Started

Make sure you have Starcraft installed, and that you have at least 80megs of hard drive space available before you begin. The extra hard drive space is necessary to contain the .WAV files that the SCSOUNDS program will extract from Starcraft.

Locate and run the SCSOUNDS program included with this help file. The program will create a Sound folder in your Starcraft directory into which the program will extract all of the .WAV files used in Starcraft.

Every unit or building sound in Starcraft may be customized with our own, unique, .WAV file. By replacing the .WAV files contained in these directories, you can customize any sound in Starcraft to your liking. This help file will describe the procedure used to replaced the sounds and provides a listing and description of the individual sound files used by the game.

Sound Listing

Replacing a Sound

When Starcraft needs to play a sound, it usually looks in its special Mopaq file for the appropriate .WAV file. However, if there is a Sound directory containing the appropriate file it is looking for, then it will default to playing that sound instead. This is why you can replace a sound in Starcraft by placing the right file into the right directory in the Sound folder.

- To replace a sound, you must locate the appropriate .WAV file in the Sound folder, and replace it with your own.
- Use the sound listings included with this file to help you locate the sound you want.

Example:

If you wanted to change the Protoss Advisor's "You've not enough minerals" sound, the listing indicates you would change the .WAV file called PadErr00 located in the Sound/Protoss/Advisor folder.

Next, take the new .WAV file you wish to use as a replacement, and name it the same as the file you will be replacing. Note that names are not case sensitive. Then, copy that new sound over the old one in the directory in which you found it. In this case, the replacement sound would be named PadErr00 and then copied over the old PadErr00 file. You may wish to rename the original sound to something instead of just copying over it.

The next time you run the game, the Advisor will have a new sound!

If you ever want the old sound back, replace the new sound with the original renamed file (renamed to the appropriate name), or simply delete the current .WAV file. Remember that deleting the .WAV file will cause Starcraft to use the default sound located in its Mopaq file.

Note: All sounds in Starcraft are 16-bit, 22.050 kHz, Mono .WAV files. We highly recommend that your replacement sounds also follow this format for optimal performance and audio quality.

Sound Listing

Getting the Sound Back

Even though you replaced a sound with your own, you never really lose the original sound. To get it back, simply delete your replacement sound, and Starcraft will play the original sound by default.

Sound Listing

This listing describe the contents of the various .WAV files you will find in the Sound directory created by the SCSOUNDS program. They are roughly arranged by categories such as species and units. You will note that some of unit names do not match up with what the unit is actually called in Starcraft, and instead are listed by older, obsolete code names. We have noted these instances where they occur.
