

Uses of diodes

Diodes are used to protect electrical equipment, such as computers, which would be damaged if the power supply or battery was reversed. In the circuit shown, the diode is connected in series with the battery and, therefore, if the battery was connected the wrong way round, no current would flow as the diode is reverse-biased that is it is acting as an insulator and so stopping the current.