

Charging a rod positively by friction

When a cellulose acetate, perspex or glass rod is rubbed on a cotton cloth, some of the electrons are removed from the rod and transferred to the cloth. This means that the rod has lost electrons and therefore has a positive charge and the cloth has extra electrons and is therefore negatively charged.