

EHRENBREITSTEIN

Oh warmly down the sunbeams fell,
Along the broad and fierce Moselle,
And on the distant mountain ridge,
And on the city and the bridge,
So beautiful that stood
Tall tower, and spire, or gloomy port
Were made and shattered in the sport
Of that impetuous flood,
That on the one side, washed the wall,