

ower Mac-less Pi

It sounds like Pi obviously doesn't own a Power Mac. Maybe if he even tried one he would understand that they are alot better than he said they were. Why would anybody make fun of a faster, better, more powerful computer? That's like a Windows user making fun of a Macintosh.

Julie
via the internet

i's Place not a place for Power Macs

After reading the July issue of The Mac Savvy, I was outraged. Don't get me wrong, I love the magazine, but I may be skipping Pi's column if it has to do with Power Macs. I own two, and they are much better than my Performa 6200. "Pi's Place" is obviously not a place for Power Macs.

Colin
via America Online

qx?

Macgod,

I'm a faithful macuser trapped using a Indy unix machine at work; in order to download most mac-related files I have to run them through a filter, which means I must know the file extension (.+3).

I would like to download your newsletters, but will need to know if they're hqx, bin, etc.

(Yes, I could download them from home, but then I wouldn't get the T-1 speeds!)

Thanks,

Mike Gaines
via the internet

You can download any issue of The Mac Savvy from our web site at <http://www.macsavvy.com/macsavvy/download/>. There you can find all of our back issues and current issues ready for downloading.-Ed

i and the 7100 av

Now that is a sad story but not at all like mine. I have what appears to be an identical computer but mine not only works...it works flawlessly with several scsi peripherals...jaz drive, zip drive and, modem supra and epson colour stylus printer. Clearly, the apple tech you talked with was an arrogant moron. I hope the new apple gives him/her walking papers. I must say I have had great luck calling Apple Canada. Perhaps, the mother ought to talk to her smaller siblings for public relations advice regarding the help line. In any case it is obvious your computer has or had a problem and that is that. I have used mine for over a year and have around 3000 hours on it.

Just three strands of rusty barbed wire from the North Pole...

Neil Fiertel
via the internet

o what do you think? Here's how to tell us:

If you want to comment to any of the writers, just look for their e-mail addresses at the bottom of the article. If you want to comment about the zine in general, then send it to Letters@macsavvy.com.

To subscribe (for free) to The Mac Savvy EZine send your email to Subscribe@macsavvy.com.