

Witches

copyright 1999 James Burton

Witches is not a public domain game. However, you may distribute copies of the game under the following conditions:

- The copy you distribute must be unaltered from the original. If you are unsure whether your copy is original or not, you can always download it directly from <http://www.strangegames.com/>
- You can give out copies to your friends, or put a copy on a web site, but you cannot give out the code for registration of the game. That would really be stealing; and I need to make money somehow.
- You cannot take credit for making the game, unless, of course, you're me.
- You cannot sell the game. Note that including the game in a CD-ROM with lots of other games (for sale, or for including with a magazine or whatever) is allowed as long as you get permission from me first. Email inquiries@strangegames.com for information.

Note that, to the best of my knowledge, the music included with the game is public domain. You can replace it with any other music according to your preference; I designed it as open-ended so people can play whatever MIDI they want in the background (including the public domain midi's for those who don't have a few of their own). If you are the author of one of these midis and want it removed from the game, email inquiries@strangegames.com and I will take it out immediately.